Gabrielle Adjerad is a PhD student at the university Paris Nanterre in France. She works under the supervision of Hélène Aji in the CREA (Centre de Recherches Anglophones). Her dissertation focusses on the interrelation of bad affects and difference in migration and post-migration writing by women writers of the early 21st century. She has published on Sandra Cisneros and Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie in EOLLES and L'Atelier.

Alex Brostoff is Assistant Professor of English at Kenyon College. Their research and pedagogy converge at the crossroads of cultural criticism, critical theory, and queer and transfeminist cultural production in twentieth and twenty-first century hemispheric American studies. They are the guest editor of a special issue of ASAP/Journal on autotheory and their scholarship, translations, and public writing have appeared in journals including Critical Times: Interventions in Global Critical Theory, Representations, Essay: A Journal of Nonfiction Studies, and Hyperallergic, among others.

A New York City-based teacher and scholar, Eric Daffron is a professor of literature at Ramapo College of New Jersey, where he teaches gothic literature and literary theory, among other subjects. His past scholarship has focused on the gothic novel, Michel Foucault, and issues concerning sexuality and the body. More recently, his writing has taken an autotheoretical turn with a particular focus on Roland Barthes.

Kelsey Davies is a doctoral student at the New Sorbonne University. Her dissertation, (Re)writing the ProstituteBody: Autobiographical Narratives of Sexual Labor, United States from 2000 is being written under the supervision of Alexandra Poulain and explores the themes of agency, consent, subjectivity, and the body in contemporary autobiographical narratives of sex work.

Aude Haffen is Senior Lecturer in English Literature at University Montpellier III. Her research focusses on LGBTQ theory, the works of Christopher Isherwood and all forms of life writing, notably autobiography, autofiction, letters and travelogues. She has published journal articles and book chapters on Christopher Isherwood and other writers, including Thomas De Quincey, Oscar Wilde, E.M. Forster and Mary McCarthy, and co-edited a volume of essays, Writers' Biographies and Family Histories in 20th- and 21st-Century Literature (Cambridge Scholars, 2018). She was awarded a 2019-2020 Christopher Isherwood Fellowship from the Huntington Library and is currently writing a monograph on this author.

Timothy Mathews is Emeritus Professor of French and Comparative Criticism, University College London. He is fascinated by what engaging with art can tell us about engaging with people. His most recent book is Alberto Giacometti: the Art of Relation (2014). His co-edited books include Tradition, Translation, Trauma, with Jan Parker (2011), Poetic Biopolitics, with Peg Rawe and Stephen Loo (2015), and The Modernist Bestiary, with Sarah Kay (2020). His most recent translation is of a novel by Guillaume Apollinaire, Seated Woman (2022).

Daniele Pomilio is a graduate in multimedia arts, and is the author of a monograph on videogame design. He has recently written on Germano Celant's exhibits of performance artists in Venice, on Jim Jarmusch's relation to the New York Poets and on Sylvia Plath's radiodrama inspired by a Bergman film on birth. He is currently creating an interactive application using pictorial art techniques in order to beautify a visual domain that is often not art-conscious enough.

Adam Spanos is a Postdoctoral Teaching Fellow in the Department of Comparative Literature at the University of Southern California. His research is focused on cultural politics in the Arab eastern Mediterranean, comparative settler colonialisms, and contemporary postcolonial criticism. His essays have appeared in journals such as Alif: A Journal of Comparative Poetics, Comparative Literature, and The Cambridge Journal of Postcolonial Literary Inquiry, as well as in The Oxford Research Encyclopedia of Literature and The Postcolonial Contemporary, edited by Jini Kim Watson and Gary Wilder (Fordham UP, 2018).

Andy Stafford is Professor of French and Critical Theory at the University of Leeds (UK), and was, in 2018-2019, Visiting Professor at the Université Paris Sorbonne Nord (Villetaneuse). He is co-editor, with Claire Lozier and Jivitesh Vashisht, of a special number of Paragraph, 'Samuel Beckett and Roland

Barthes: Unspoken Dialogues' (July 2022). His latest book, Roland Barthes Writing the Political: History, Dialectics, Self has just been published by Anthem Press (Autumn 2022).

Stephanos Stephanides is a poet, essayist and memoirist, translator, ethnographer, and documentary filmmaker. He began his academic career teaching literature at the University of Guyana for six years, where he developed a deep interest in Caribbean Creole and Indian diasporic communities, and thereafter a lifelong engagement with India. He was Professor of English and Comparative Literature at the University of Cyprus until 2017. Selections of his poetry have been published in more than twelve languages. He is a Writing Fellow of the International Writers Program of the University of Iowa. He was awarded first prize for poetry from the American Anthropological Association, 1988, and first prize for video poetry for his film Poets in No Man's Land at the Nicosia International Film Festival. He has served as judge for the Commonwealth Writers Prize (2000, 2010, 2022). He is a Fellow of the English Association, and Cavaliere of the Republic of Italy. Representative publications include Translating Kali's Feast: the Goddess in Indo- Caribbean Ritual and Fiction (2000), Blue Moon in Rajasthan and other poems (2005), and most recently The Wind Under My Lips/«Ο Άνεμος κάτω απ' τα χείλη μου», a bilingual anthology with Greek translation by Despina Pirketti (Rodakio: Athens, 2018).
